This career fair is a collaboration between the University Career Center and the J. Lounsbury College of Education. All graduating teacher candidates in the B.S. and M.A.T. programs as well as students from any major interested in pursuing teaching careers are invited to meet and network with participating school systems, teacher organizations, and accredited graduate schools. The Teacher Recruitment Day will be held at Georgia College Wellness & Recreation Center on Friday, January 28th from 10 a.m. - 12 p.m., students will have time to network with all participating employers.

Newell Scholar explores indigenous sacred dance in community presentation

University Communications : Wednesday January 19, 2022

Dance can evoke emotions. It can help people with all kinds of human circumstances—from transitioning and rituals, rites of passage and death, and questions about living.

The Spring 2022 Martha Daniel Newell Visiting Scholar Dr. Carla Walter will explore the impact dance has had through history at her first open lecture Tuesday, Jan. 25 a 7 p.m. in Peabody Auditorium of Kilpatrick Hall. This event is free and open to the public.

She will present on the topic of “Indigenous Sacred Dance and Religious Histories” discussing some histories of indigenous sacred dance and religion from various points around the globe, dating before the Common Era.

“Attendees will gain an understanding of how religion, art, and sacred dance have intersected over time, and take with them a sense awe,” Walter said.

She received a Bachelor of Arts from the University of California, Riverside in economics and a Master of Business Administration from California State University, San Bernardino. Walter’s Doctor of Philosophy focuses on dance history and theory and is from the University of California, Riverside.

Throughout her career, Walter has worked in business, economics, finance, as well as, higher education. Her research has looked at not only the spirituality of dance but also the ways that dance can influence purchase behavior in consumers, among other things.

The author of several books including “Sacred Dance Meditations: 365 Globally Inspired Movement Practices Enhancing Awakening, Clarity, and Connection,” “Arts Management: An Entrepreneurial Approach” and “Dance, Consumerism, and Spirituality,” Walter will teach a class at Georgia College this semester on Global Perspectives of Indigenous Dance and Religious Histories.

“Students are going to learn to analyze a culture’s sense of being as it’s related to indigenous dance,” said Walter. “We will look at locations from Egypt to Africa to Mesoamerica over to the Polynesian Islands and Australia, back up to India, Mongolia, Tibet, back over to Persia, and then the Andes. So, the students are going to get a worldview.”

Two other presentations later in the spring semester will feature the work of her students. Those will be April 5 at 7 - 8 p.m. and April 26 at 7 - 8 p.m. Both take place in Ennis Hall 201.

Regional Science and Engineering Fair for grades 6-12 at Georgia College

Science Education Center : Friday January 28, 2022

The 45 Annual Regional Science and Engineering Fair for grades 6 through 12 will be Friday, Feb. 4, at Georgia College's Centennial Center.

The fair will be a hybrid competition this year, offering virtual judging Feb. 1-3 for students unable to travel to campus due to illness or quarantine. The in-person exhibit and judging will be Feb. 4 for on-campus attendees.

"Even before the seismic disruption of the pandemic, state data showed students from our region lagged behind with large racial and economic achievement gaps. Science is tough enough face-to-face but asking teachers and students to do it at home behind a computer screen with limited resources was an even bigger obstacle," said Dr. Catrena Lisse, director of Georgia College's Science Education Center.

"Now that most schools have returned to in-person or at least hybrid classes, we're seeing our numbers increase with numerous projects focusing on healthcare topics," she said. "The pandemic definitely made students aware of their health and the health of their loved ones."

Some projects this year include:

- An investigation of how blue light, emitting from electronic devices, affects eyes.
- The antibacterial effects of honey.
- The creation of a novel artificial intelligence learning model, using MRI images and genomic data to better diagnose neurological diseases.

"It is our hope this curiosity leads to new discoveries," Lisse said, "because this is the next generation of doctors and scientists."

The in-person event Feb. 4 opens at 8:30 a.m. for set up. Competitors will be judged between 10 a.m. and noon, at which time the fair is closed to the public.

Exhibits will be open to the public 2 to 4 p.m. There'll be a STEM exhibit and Webb Telescope design challenge. Competitor teams can participate in STEM challenges from 1:30 to 3 p.m. These include Rube Goldberg designs and a flying fish obstacle course.

The awards ceremony will be at 5 p.m. in the Arts and Sciences Auditorium, streamed through Facebook Live (@GCScienceEdu) and recorded to be posted to the Science Education Center's YouTube channel for those unable to attend in person.

CTL Workshop - Community Building in a Digital Environment

Center for Teaching & Learning : Monday January 31, 2022

Best practice suggests that a classroom conducive to learning has several components: a sense of community, clear communication, established expectations and routines, learner interaction, and organized resources and materials. Also, learning environments should focus equally on the student, knowledge, assessment, and inclusivity. It is possible to create a digital learning environment that develops into a community of learners. The suggested practices in this session will provide you with ideas to build learning communities within your digital learning environments.

This virtual workshop will be held at 12 noon on February 15. The meeting link will be sent out to registrants on the day of the workshop.

CTL Workshop - Flipping the Classroom

Center for Teaching & Learning : Monday January 31, 2022

A flipped classroom is an instructional approach where the traditional lecture and homework elements are reversed, asking students to complete course tasks (i.e., handouts, readings, videos) outside of the classroom and work on problems and solutions while in class. This strategy aims to deepen students' engagement and knowledge by repurposing instruction, so students inquire about lecture content, apply their knowledge, and participate in hands-on activities while in class. During this session, instructors will receive more than a conceptual understanding of flipping the classroom - Jaclyn Queen and Simeco Vinson will reveal proven instructional strategies that engage students who are not always motivated to complete out-of-class work. At the end of this session, you will have tools and techniques to apply this approach in your content.

This virtual workshop will be held at 3:30 pm on February 10. The meeting link will be sent out to registrants the day of the workshop.

CTL Workshop - Developing Student Critical Thinking through Higher-Order Questioning

Center for Teaching & Learning : Monday January 31, 2022

Research has shown that Higher-Order Questions (HOQs) require advanced cognitive demand and help students develop critical thinking skills. Higher-Order Questions (HOQs) are questions students cannot answer with a yes or no response or provide information quoted from a textbook. Instructors can use HOQs to help students build critical thinking skills. This session explores creating higher-order questions for students using AAC&U's Critical Thinking Rubric as an integral component. Session materials will help you develop a set of content-specific questions to use with your students to help them build questioning patterns that lead to thinking critically.

This virtual workshop will be held at 3 pm on February 25. The meeting link will be sent out to registrants on the day of the workshop.
