Search, Rescue & Prepping for Disaster: Just another day for this intern

Between meetings at her internship this summer, Dr. Elizabeth Czarick, 23, helped missing persons, radiation attacks and disaster prep.

She has just finished an internship with the Georgia College Department of Homeland Security—her future profession. This was crucial for the county’s hazard mitigation efforts.

Czarick graduated with a public health degree from Georgia College & State University and will enter graduate school in the fall to pursue her master’s in Health and Human Performance.

As a part of the Governmental County, she coordinated search and rescue training missions. She was for the city. Working with the county as a whole, she learned to think of the team as a whole.

“Emergencies are just one aspect of the team. There are so many more ways to interact with the community.”

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides. They don’t think twice about making the time to train with them.”

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Dr. Michael Snowden has big plans in the works for diversity, equity and inclusion at Georgia College & State University.

Snowden began serving as Georgia College’s new chief diversity officer in July. He has been honored and privileged to have served as a police officer to stand up for equity and inclusion at home, and the university.

Snowden said he was inspired to attend Georgia College and State University as a result of the Department of Homeland Security, Georgia & State University.

During her internship, Czarick traveled with the team whenever they went and helped during research and rescue training missions.

“I was able to get hands-on experience,” she said.

“Search, rescue & Prepping for Disaster: Just another day for this intern

Between meetings at her internship this summer, Elizabeth Czarick, 23, helped missing persons, radiation attacks and disaster prep.

She has just finished an internship with the Georgia College Department of Homeland Security—her future profession. This was crucial for the county’s hazard mitigation efforts.

Czarick graduated with a public health degree from Georgia College & State University and will enter graduate school in the fall to pursue her master’s in Health and Human Performance.

As a part of the Governmental County, she coordinated search and rescue training missions. She was for the city. Working with the county as a whole, she learned to think of the team as a whole.

“Emergencies are just one aspect of the team. There are so many more ways to interact with the community.”

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides. They don’t think twice about making the time to train with them.”

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Dr. Michael Snowden has big plans in the works for diversity, equity and inclusion at Georgia College & State University.

Snowden began serving as Georgia College’s new chief diversity officer in July. He has been honored and privileged to have served as a police officer to stand up for equity and inclusion at home, and the university.

Snowden said he was inspired to attend Georgia College and State University as a result of the Department of Homeland Security, Georgia & State University.

During her internship, Czarick traveled with the team whenever they went and helped during research and rescue training missions.

“I was able to get hands-on experience,” she said.

“Search, rescue & Prepping for Disaster: Just another day for this intern

Between meetings at her internship this summer, Elizabeth Czarick, 23, helped missing persons, radiation attacks and disaster prep.

She has just finished an internship with the Georgia College Department of Homeland Security—her future profession. This was crucial for the county’s hazard mitigation efforts.

Czarick graduated with a public health degree from Georgia College & State University and will enter graduate school in the fall to pursue her master’s in Health and Human Performance.

As a part of the Governmental County, she coordinated search and rescue training missions. She was for the city. Working with the county as a whole, she learned to think of the team as a whole.

“Emergencies are just one aspect of the team. There are so many more ways to interact with the community.”

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides. They don’t think twice about making the time to train with them.”

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Dr. Michael Snowden has big plans in the works for diversity, equity and inclusion at Georgia College & State University.

Snowden began serving as Georgia College’s new chief diversity officer in July. He has been honored and privileged to have served as a police officer to stand up for equity and inclusion at home, and the university.

Snowden said he was inspired to attend Georgia College and State University as a result of the Department of Homeland Security, Georgia & State University.

During her internship, Czarick traveled with the team whenever they went and helped during research and rescue training missions.

“I was able to get hands-on experience,” she said.

“Search, rescue & Prepping for Disaster: Just another day for this intern

Between meetings at her internship this summer, Elizabeth Czarick, 23, helped missing persons, radiation attacks and disaster prep.

She has just finished an internship with the Georgia College Department of Homeland Security—her future profession. This was crucial for the county’s hazard mitigation efforts.

Czarick graduated with a public health degree from Georgia College & State University and will enter graduate school in the fall to pursue her master’s in Health and Human Performance.

As a part of the Governmental County, she coordinated search and rescue training missions. She was for the city. Working with the county as a whole, she learned to think of the team as a whole.

“Emergencies are just one aspect of the team. There are so many more ways to interact with the community.”

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides. They don’t think twice about making the time to train with them.”

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Dr. Michael Snowden has big plans in the works for diversity, equity and inclusion at Georgia College & State University.

Snowden began serving as Georgia College’s new chief diversity officer in July. He has been honored and privileged to have served as a police officer to stand up for equity and inclusion at home, and the university.

Snowden said he was inspired to attend Georgia College and State University as a result of the Department of Homeland Security, Georgia & State University.

During her internship, Czarick traveled with the team whenever they went and helped during research and rescue training missions.

“I was able to get hands-on experience,” she said.

“Search, rescue & Prepping for Disaster: Just another day for this intern

Between meetings at her internship this summer, Elizabeth Czarick, 23, helped missing persons, radiation attacks and disaster prep.

She has just finished an internship with the Georgia College Department of Homeland Security—her future profession. This was crucial for the county’s hazard mitigation efforts.

Czarick graduated with a public health degree from Georgia College & State University and will enter graduate school in the fall to pursue her master’s in Health and Human Performance.

As a part of the Governmental County, she coordinated search and rescue training missions. She was for the city. Working with the county as a whole, she learned to think of the team as a whole.

“Emergencies are just one aspect of the team. There are so many more ways to interact with the community.”

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides. They don’t think twice about making the time to train with them.”

Did you know?

Georgia College & State University’s Learning Center just celebrated 10 years of its Supplemental Instruction (SI) program where students tutor other students. One of the first accredited SI training programs in Georgia, SI tutoring sessions offer close-knit study sessions for students of all levels and majors.

In spring 2023, 50% of all Georgia College students attended SI sessions. Of those, only 17% dropped, well below the national rate of 25% for those who did not participate in SI.

“I think it’s a wonderful resource that the school provides that you don’t see in some other universities,” said Dr. Kelly Hill, 15, lecturer of economics and former SI leader. “It makes a big difference.”

New chief diversity officer has big plans for campus and community

Dr. Michael Snowden has big plans in the works for diversity, equity and inclusion at Georgia College & State University.

Snowden began serving as Georgia College’s new chief diversity officer in July. He has been honored and privileged to have served as a police officer to stand up for equity and inclusion at home, and the university.

Snowden said he was inspired to attend Georgia College and State University as a result of the Department of Homeland Security, Georgia & State University.

During her internship, Czarick traveled with the team whenever they went and helped during research and rescue training missions.

“I was able to get hands-on experience,” she said.