- V. Aux funérailles du chef—pour obtenir la protection de son âme

“I wanted to state the prime importance of the monodic element in music, i.e. melody meticulously organised from the point of view both of successive harmony and of rhythm, volume and pitch. The only purpose, however, of the carefully measured combinations of these different elements is to generate musical feeling and, in the most sensitive (or the "newest") listeners, a feeling similar to the panic impulses of primitive man.

It was better to achieve this result that I chose the flute which is the musical instrument par excellence because, endowed with life by the breath, man's deepest emanation, the flute charges sounds with what is both visceral and cosmic in us.”

ANDRÉ JOLIVET, 1936
