Three members of the Georgia Democratic Caucus responded to a variety of questions from constituents during a town hall meeting held in the Arts and Sciences Auditorium at Georgia College and State University on Monday, June 9. The featured speakers included Ga. House District 149 Rep. Floyd L. Griffin Jr.; Rep. Carolyn Hugley, who serves as Minority Leader of the Ga. House of Representatives; and Rep. Solomon Adesanya of Marietta. (Billy W. Hobbs/The Union-Recorder)

A town hall meeting hosted by Georgia House District 149 Rep. Floyd L. Griffin Jr., featured two other prominent members of the Georgia House of Representatives.

The town hall was held June 9 at Georgia College & State University.

Griffin was joined by Georgia House of Representatives Minority Leader Carolyn Hugley of Columbus and state Rep. Solomon Adesanya of Marietta.

The event was held in the Arts & Sciences Auditorium and lasted a little more than an hour. It drew about 90 people, including several from other parts of Georgia.

"This is something very important to the (Georgia Democratic) Caucus and to me," Griffin said. "I always, when I run for office, I generally make sure that the things I promise you that I'm going to attempt to do, I will attempt to do those. And one of those was to have town hall meetings after the (Georgia) Legislative Session. This is our first quarterly town hall meeting."

Griffin noted that Hugley, whom he has known since he served in the Georgia Senate back in the '90s, said she had wanted to hold town hall meetings and she wanted one of them to be held in Milledgeville.
